

STEVEN ALEXANDER JOURNAL

4.3.18

WILLIAM BAILEY at the Century Club
By Eric HolzmanWilliam Bailey, Morra, 2000, Oil on linen, 15 7/8 x 19 3/4 inches

For years I've seen William Bailey as a revolutionary painter. He is a most unlikely painter for these times, and surely an unlikely revolutionary as well. While sitting with notes and memories of his show at the Century Club, the words of the mystic, revolutionary and all around trouble maker, Jesus Christ came too me, "Be in this world but not of it." In a similar way, Bailey seems to have turned inward, away from consensus reality to find and sustain his personal vision throughout his long life and, unswerving career. Unlike in attitude, stance, and intention to nearly every modern painter to date, Bailey seems to take our well being into account as well as the saving of his own soul, as if it were an element of his professional practice. His intent is not to take anything from us or to impose; he is no infant terrible. He doesn't want to have his way with us, nor is he an aggressor. There is no unconscious conflict raging to be worked out in public, to which we the audience must be privy. In these ways his art is not art for art's sake, or for ego's sake, but responsible grown up art of the highest ambition - to enrich and illuminate the culture from which it comes. He has turned away from what to me are some overriding legacies and fundamental tendencies of Modernism. Bailey it seems has tuned himself into an entirely different frequency from which to channel and make his painting. And I ask myself, how does one make paintings that engage visually, painting that is spiritually rewarding, and painting that need not overturn, or turn away from the past? Also I ask how does one make art that is not thoroughly abstracted of its emotional content for fear of appearing soft or sentimental.

Bailey's work seems more sophisticated, complex, and in some ways more difficult than many artists with seemingly similar ambitions. It unifies and reckons with desire and puritanism, with tradition and modernism, with romantic longing, connection and tenderness, and with the awful distancing of austerity and fear. There is wisdom in this work and in its stance. The artist himself contains all of these aforementioned traits, as we all do in different measure, and the miracle is that he has alchemically found a way to live and paint them with dignity and serenity.

STEVEN ALEXANDER STUDIO

- STUDIO WEBSITE
- Selected Published Texts
- Contact

EXHIBITIONS - Recent & Upcoming

Art On Paper NY 2018
Spanierman Modern
New York
March 8 - 11, 2018

Juxtaposition
Galerie Biesenbach
Cologne
January 12 - February 23, 2018

Louder Than Bombs
Curated by Douglas Witmer
The Curator Gallery
New York
January 10 - February 24, 2018

Steven Alexander: Efforts of Affection
- A Decade of Painting
Gremillion & Co Fine Art
Houston
April 6 - May 6, 2017

Steven Alexander: Places To Be The Curator Gallery
New York
January 11 - February 18, 2017

Art Palm Beach
Baker Sponder Gallery
Miami
January 19 - 22, 2017

Palm Beach Modern + Contemporary
Baker Sponder Gallery
Miami
January 12 - 15, 2017

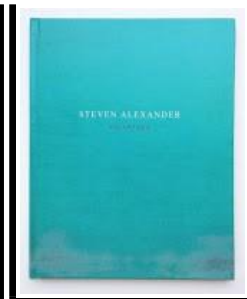

RECENT PUBLICATION

William Bailey, TUSCAN ROSE, 2000, Tempera on paper, 19 1/2 x 24 3/4 inches

It's no news that our world is driven largely by materialism and consumerism. When most of us enter it, we are encouraged with differing degrees of force to suppress our emotions and our instincts. Love is often with-held. Affection and attention are connected to systems of reward and punishment based on achievement and behavior. Our culture teaches us to mistrust, even fear our inner guidance, and we feel cut off from spirit and from what is sacred. We call god and spirit dead. We wonder if we have any value at all and or whether we are even worthy of our existence. This is quite a violent scenario, and it's no wonder that this violence is then acted out in other areas of life. Most of us are medicated in one way or another to deal with the madness. Against this backdrop, sensitive and brilliant artists have mimicked in one way or another aspects of the dysfunctional world into which they are born. We diminish heart, emotion and soul in our work. Many major artists of the modern era have tended to do this consciously and unconsciously. Warhol's studio was "The Factory" named ironically, to emphasize the machine-made, impersonal, and mass-produced. Other artists express the flip side of the coin - violence, rage and frustration. One way or another like nearly everyone else in our culture, artists have succumbed to the impulse to deny themselves, or become numb to the possibility of a sane, full, compassionate, vibrant, loving life. A life that I sense and believe strongly lives somewhere inside, sometimes deeply buried in all of our hearts.

Bailey is of another intent. He is an artist of Mid-western restraint and he retains some of the best values of his origins. His paintings offer a brush with the eternal, and the sensual, the Mediterranean sensibility, and they project a stable, humble, even noble confidence. It is a painted world that is relatively safe and peaceful, and this is a radical vision.

STEVEN ALEXANDER: PAINTINGS
48 pages, 24 color plates, hardcover
With Interview by Vered Lieb

RECENT WORK

ARCADE 5, oil & acrylic on canvas,
22 x 18"

Search this Weblog

Translate this Weblog

Powered by Google Translate

Follow by Email

Subscribe to this Weblog

Favorite Posts

- Notes On Abstraction
- Meaning & Abstract Painting
- Superb Painters
- Brazil
- Italy & the Aesthetics of Decay
- Rothko Chapel & the Menil Collection
- Blinky Palermo: To the People of New York City - Revisited
- Tantra at Feature
- Cordy Ryman & Richard Tuttle: Exalted Ephemera
- In Defense of Poetry: Cy Twombly
- Alanna Heiss & P.S.1 - A Tribute
- The Critic Sees - Parts 1 & 2
- In the Studio

Labels

- 400 Electric Guitars (1)

William Bailey, Doglio, 2007, Oil on linen, 36 x 39 inches

Contemporary quantum physics, and both ancient and contemporary spiritual masters teach that our thoughts and feelings are of real stuff, realer in fact than the physical reality that seems so convincing to our senses. Our thoughts and feelings are the machinery that creates the mirror that is the world in which we live. In fact there is no world out there, so much as the world we experience as a reflection of our inner world, our projections. Fairfield Porter said it too in a way. In painting, it is all decision; there is no objective world by which to measure the success of a painting. There is no there there. Reality is a puritanical myth.

In Bailey's work there is no attempt to accurately reproduce "Reality". But deceptively and stubbornly, even ironically, Bailey's paintings are powerful meditations on the meanings of abstraction and representation in painting. They maintain a workman-like purity and a simplicity of execution. Abstract elements in his art are distinctly and unquestionably formalist, modernist, timeless and deeply felt.

As a means, an approach or a strategy, modeling is very rarely used in great modern painting. But in William Bailey's paintings forms are turned in space with the artist's slow, careful, touch. It is a look that almost vanished with the discoveries and inventions of the Impressionists, but ultimately modeling is just as abstract in conception and execution as daubs or flat sheets of color and can be of equal delight to the eye. Yet as Bailey models in color (and paint), he retains the surface as all great painting naturally does. In the large open areas such as the walls of his interiors and still lives, his painted planes feel a-kin to early Marden, physical and monumental, deeply resonant and tough. Bailey's color is reduced in pitch to earthy tones that resonate warmly in subdued sonorous harmonics. The back room of Betty Cunningham's twenty-fifth street gallery was transformed into a chapel when Bailey showed his work in that space.

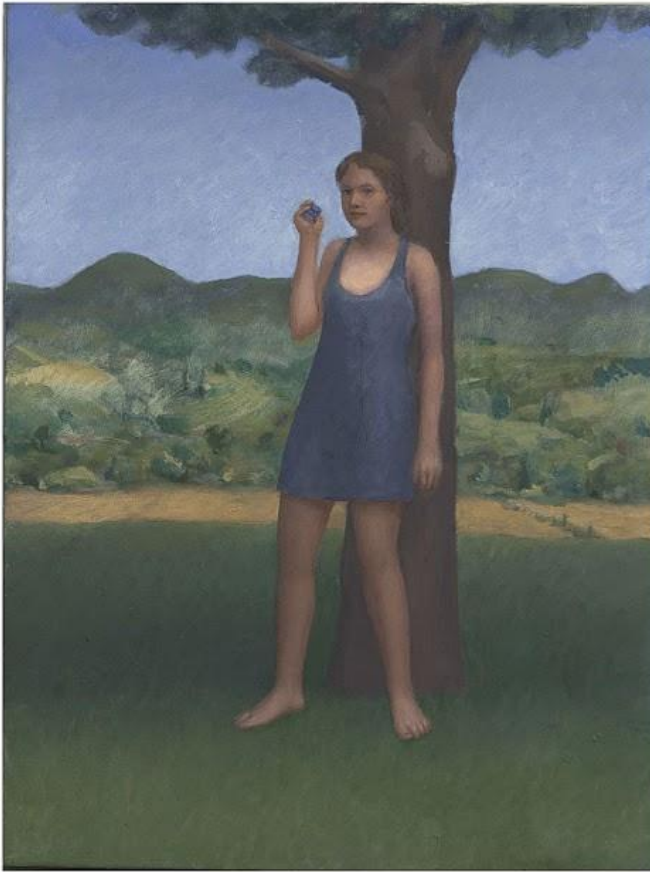

Abraham Palatnik (1)
 Abstract Painting (253)
 Ad Reinhardt (2)
 Adolfo Estrada (1)
 Aesthetics of Decay (3)
 Afghans for Afghans (1)
 Agnes Martin (3)
 Al Held (2)
 Alain Biltreyest (1)
 Alan Shields (2)
 Alanna Heiss (1)
 Alberto Guinard (1)
 Ali Smith (1)
 Alison Hall (2)
 Alma Thomas (1)
 Almir Mavignier (1)
 Alvaro Seixas (1)
 American Abstract Artists (3)
 Amy Sillman (2)
 Andrew Mochler (1)
 Anne Seidman (1)
 Anne Truitt (1)
 Antonio Dias (1)
 Antonio Murado (1)
 Art Bloggers (3)
 Art for Haiti (1)
 Art Documentation Program (1)
 Assisi (1)
 Baptistry (2)
 Barnett Newman (1)
 Beatriz Milhazes (1)
 Beauty (1)
 Bill Arnett (1)
 Bill Jensen (1)
 Black and White (1)
 Black Paintings (1)
 Blinky Palermo (3)
 Blogpix (1)
 Bo Diddley (1)
 Body Painting (1)
 Bonnard (1)
 Brazil (8)
 Brazil Paiva (1)
 Brice Marden (2)
 Broadway Boogie Woogie (1)
 Bronzino (1)
 Carmen Herrera (1)
 Carol Mancusi-Ungaro (1)
 Carolee Schneemann (1)
 Carrie Beckmann (1)
 Carrie Mae Weems (1)
 Cassio Michalany (1)
 Catalogue Essays (1)
 Celia Johnson (1)
 Celine Danhier (1)
 Chaim Soutine (1)
 Chantal Jaffe (1)
 Cheim and Read (2)
 Chris Ashley (1)
 Chris Martin (1)
 Christopher Wool (1)
 Cimabue (1)
 Cinema (2)
 Claire Seidl (1)
 Clare Grill (1)
 Collage (1)
 Color (109)
 Contemporary Art (2)
 Contortions (1)

William Bailey, Ceremony, 2006, Oil on linen, 40 x 48 inches

Further, I find his still life objects lock together on the surface in a sure but uncanny way. His rhythms and shapes surprisingly suggest to me something of Gorky's delicate, incisive, surreal line which runs through the field playing between positive and negative, dancing quietly and playfully across the surface. In the figure paintings, it may be fun to notice an object, a cigarette or a cell phone that reassures us by placing both ourselves and the paintings, in our proper time and space. But reading the paintings literally and looking for a signifier such as a cell phone or some other object to reassure us that these are justifiably modern, is totally unnecessary and only shows how far we are from being able to discern painterly language - the language of the heart - when we are face to face with it, and how addicted we are to sensationalism. Bailey's friend, Al Held called it pitifully, "the necessity of every young artist to reinvent the wheel".

Cordy Ryman (1)
 Corot (1)
 Crimson Grail (1)
 Cristina Canale (1)
 Critics (2)
 Cy I womblly (1)
 Cy I womblly Gallery (1)
 Cynthia Hartling (1)
 Dan Havin (3)
 Dan Walsh (1)
 Daniel Levine (1)
 David Buckingham (1)
 David Findlay Jr (1)
 David Maisel (1)
 David Novros (2)
 David Reed (1)
 David Row (2)
 Nelson Uchoa (1)
 Dennis Oppenheim (2)
 diddley bow (1)
 Don Christensen (3)
 Don Muchow (1)
 Don Voisine (5)
 Doug Ohlson (1)
 Douglas Witmer (3)
 Drawings (2)
 Duane Paluska (1)
 Duane Paluska (1)
 Ed Moses (1)
 Ela Orleans (1)
 Election 2008 (1)
 Elizabeth Hazan (1)
 Elizabeth Jobim (1)
 Ellsworth Kelly (3)
 Emery Blagdon (1)
 Emily Berger (2)
 Encaustic (1)
 Eric Brown (1)
 Eric Dever (1)
 Eric Holzman (6)
 Ethiopia (1)
 Eva Lake (2)
 Fabio Miguez (2)
 Fawn Krieger (1)
 Felix Gonzalez-Torres (1)
 Female Gaze (1)
 Florence (5)
 Food (1)
 Gene Davis (3)
 Geo/Metric (1)
 Geoform (2)
 GeoMetrics II (1)
 George Negroponte (1)
 Giorgio Morandi (2)
 Giotto (1)
 Gisele Camargo (2)
 Glen Branca (1)
 Gloria Klein (1)
 Gonalo Ivo (16)
 Gonzalo Gonzalez (1)
 Gordon Moore (1)
 Green Cloister (1)
 Gremillion Gallery (3)
 Grids (1)
 Hannah Hoch (1)
 Hannah von Bart (1)
 Hans Hoffmann (1)
 Hans Neleman (1)

William Bailey, Cellular, 2015, Oil on Linen, 15 3/4 x 11 7/8

One way to look at these paintings is to follow the way the paint moves from the forehead through the brow into the eye, and then how it creates the nose and moves toward the lips, to the chin and into the neck. Every passage disappears democratically into the whole. A human lifetime painted into and between every stroke.

This work of Bailey's brings answers to old questions such as, where does individual personality end and the eternal begin. The work is odd enough, even "wrong" enough academically to let us know from the get go that we are engaged in a world of metaphor and poetry, a dialog between the physical and spiritual, where harmony and innocence offer some visual answer to such a seemingly unsettling existence, whose physical finale we all ultimately share.

- Hans Sylvester (1)
- Helen Miranda Wilson (3)
- Helmut Federe (1)
- Herman Aron (1)
- Hinterland (1)
- History (1)
- Houston (3)
- Installation (1)
- Italy (3)
- Ivin Ballin (1)
- Jackie Meier (1)
- Jacqueline Humphries (1)
- Jake Bernot (1)
- James Biederman (2)
- James Brown (1)
- James Clark (1)
- James Kaim (2)
- Jasper Johns (1)
- Jeremy Gilbert-Roth (1)
- Jill Moser (1)
- Jim Dine (1)
- Jim Lee (3)
- Joan Mitchell (3)
- Joan Vatterman (2)
- Joanne Freeman (2)
- Joanne Mattera (1)
- John Cage (2)
- John Gilio (1)
- John Miller (1)
- John Tullman (1)
- John Zurer (2)
- Jose Carlos Cesar Ferreira (1)

- Judith Murray (1)
- Julia Rommel (1)
- Julian Hutton (1)
- Julian Jackson (2)
- Julian Schnabel (1)
- Julie Gross (3)
- Julie Karabenick (2)
- Julio Villani (2)
- Kara Walker (1)
- Karen Baumeister (1)
- Karen Gelardi (1)
- Karl Benjamin (1)
- Kate Beck (2)
- Katherine Bradford (1)
- Kazimira Rachfal (6)
- Keltie Ferris (4)
- Kevin Finklea (1)
- Kim MacConnel (1)
- Kim Uchiyama (3)
- Lael Marshall (1)
- Lance Rutledge (1)
- Larry Zox (1)
- Laura Duerwald (1)
- Laurie Fendrich (1)
- LCD Soundsystem (1)
- Ledo Ivo (2)
- Lêdo Ivo (1)
- Leif Kath (1)
- Leslie Wayne (1)
- Light (1)
- Ligurian Sea (1)
- Lisa Pressman (1)
- Liv Mette Larsen (1)
- Logan Grider (1)
- Louise Bourgeois (1)
- Louise Fishman (3)

William Bailey, WOMAN BY THE SEA, 2007, Tempera on paper, 22 3/4 x 16 3/16 inches

Bailey offers in his painting a place to be quiet, to slowdown, to meditate, to feel ourselves. The question is not how good are these paintings, or are they modern enough. The question is can we meet them where they live; where softness, introspection and kindness are virtues. We are creating our futures now, and I prefer his vision much more than most. It is a courageous stance, a vision of gentleness which requires ferocity and integrity.

All Images from Betty Cunningham Gallery Website

Posted by S.A. at 16:50

Labels: William Bailey

Newer Post

Home

Older Post

- Lucia Laguna (1)
- Luciano Figueiredo (4)
- Lynda Benglis (1)
- Lynda Ray (1)
- Lynn Woods Turner (1)
- Manfredo de SouzaNetto (2)
- Mara Held (5)
- Marco Figueiredo (1)
- Marco Giannotti (1)
- Margaret Neill (2)
- Marilyn Minter (1)
- Marina Adams (1)
- Mark Bradford (3)
- Mark Dagley (2)
- Mark Wethli (3)
- Marthe Keller (1)
- Martspeak (1)
- Mary Heilmann (1)
- Mary Obering (1)
- Matt Phillips (2)
- Matthew Collings (1)
- Matthew Langley (1)
- Maya Lin (1)
- Meghan Brady (1)
- Menil Collection (1)
- Mercato Centrale (1)
- Miami Art Fairs (2)
- Michael Knutson (1)
- Michael Voss (2)
- Mike Solomon (1)
- Milton Dacosta (1)
- Milton Resnick (1)
- MoMA (2)
- Mondrian (1)
- Mormaço (1)
- Most Memorable (6)
- Multi-Media (1)
- N. Dash (1)
- Nan Goldin (2)
- Nancy Manter (1)
- Narrative (1)
- No Chromophobia (1)
- No Wave (3)
- Olafur Eliasson (1)
- One Chord (1)
- Orange (1)
- Otis Jones (1)
- P.S.1 (2)
- Pam Farrell (3)
- Paper (5)
- Pat Steir (1)
- Paul Corio (1)
- Paul Pagk (2)
- Paulo Pasta (1)
- Perl Fine (2)
- Peter Allen Hoffmann (1)
- Peter Schroth (1)
- Philadelphia Abstraction (1)
- Philip Guston (1)
- Photography (1)
- Picasso (1)
- Piero Manzoni (1)
- Piet Mondrian (1)
- Pipilotti Rist (2)
- Poetry (1)
- Polly Apfelbaum (1)
- Postwar Women (1)
- Rachel Hayes (1)